Planning for Heritage Lecture Series

Within the Course Planning for Heritage, international experts will bring insights on methodologies and practices of preservation and enhancement of urban and landscape heritage. Particular attention will be paid to the role of planning tools and processes. These lectures also address to the students of the Post-Graduate School of Architectural Heritage and Landscape.
Conveners: Claudia Cassatella, Mauro Volpiano

The Role of Cultural Landscape in Recovery Planning from the 2011 Great East Japan Earthquake and Tsunami
Akiko Iida, The University of Tokyo

Historic Cities: Community-Based Urban Design and Planning “Machizukuri”
Takashi Ariga, Waseda University

Akiko Iida is a Japanese urbanist and researcher. Her research examines how to reduce disaster risks and enhance well-being by urban green infrastructure. She also practices various urban planning projects through collaboration with local municipalities. Iida received a PhD from Department of Urban Engineering, The University of Tokyo in 2012 and is now working as a project assistant professor for the Master's Program in Sustainable Urban Regeneration at The University of Tokyo.

Takashi Ariga is Professor of Architecture and Urban Design, Associate Dean of the School of Science and Engineering at Waseda University in Tokyo. His research and practice are focused on “Machizukuri” as a type of community-based urban design and planning, environmental and visual simulation for public design communication, and cross-cultural comparative analyses of urban forms and transformation. His major works include Urban Planning International Terminology Dictionary, The Community Building Design Process, and Karatsu: Urban Reorganization Making an Attractive Town.
