Can we imagine architecture otherwise? This book stems from the provocative design studio Architecture, Society and Territory B (MA in Architecture for Sustainability, Politecnico di Torino, 2021–2025).

With nearly 200 students, the project inquires the frictions of the Capitalocene, investigating complex human/non-human ecologies, colonialism, and extractivism of both resources and relationships.

Rather than offering solutions, it confronts a stark question: can architecture be anything other than extractive, racist, or universalist?

A collective discussion about the world's concerns, the uselessness of architecture and the infrastructures of life.
